

Leah A. Kaye, MD, FACOG

Leah A. Kaye, MD, FACOG, is a reproductive specialist at the Fertility Center of Las Vegas, where her clinical focus includes emerging areas of reproductive medicine including transgender fertility care, obesity and fertility, and embryo implantation. Dr. Kaye completed her medical degree at the University of Maryland School of Medicine, followed by an Obstetrics and Gynecology residency at the University of Connecticut, where she discovered her passion for helping patients build families through reproductive medicine. Her next steps included a fellowship in Reproductive Endocrinology and Infertility, along with a master's degree from the University of Connecticut Graduate School in Clinical and Translational Research. During her training, she was the recipient of the New England Fertility Society Fellows Grant, the Residency Education Award and the Second Year Resident Teaching Award.

Dr. Kaye's professional affiliations include membership in the Pacific Coast Reproductive Society, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, the American Society for Reproductive Medicine and the New England Fertility Society.